

Christmas letter

My last Christmas message, I wrote it in 2021. It noted the decay of our world, urged the unity of European peoples, the spirit of sharing between Christians and an awareness: the time for combat is upon us again, and it seems I haven't been far wrong. It was part of a spirit of hope for our world, for our civilization, to invent a future of peace to bequeath to our children, because this is the only way: to fight to give those who follow us a Europe (re)becoming a vital space for our peoples, where prosperity, security and our domination would be absolutely established.

This dream, this distant panacea, may be only a chimera, an unattainable goal - but (and this is the very definition of hope) it warms your heart and allows you to fight, a little longer, and always a little more. This is how a European and Christian man is defined. He fights, against the vicissitudes of everyday life, for the happiness and sustenance of his family, against the enemy when necessary - he knows and accepts that this fight will only end with his last breath. This posture of mind, this certainty that your condition as a man requires you to protect yours and to dominate the enemy must be the only thread to which you cling for the times to come.

Was you afraid of the management of COVID across Europe, the wars on our doorstep, sovereign debts, the takeover of markets from national governments or even your impoverishment through taxes or inflation? This is a good thing, because the times to come will be terrifying, unlike what our generation has experienced, and we will have to show ourselves without any form of mercy against those who want to enslave us. The observation is simple and clear, there can be no half measures, two options are available to us - and two only, with no escape or side path: fight and win or disappear.

Who is the enemy? the enemy is a whole. Multifaceted and without palpable consistency, it has many names: horde of barbarians imported by boat and protected by sick minds in the name of an ideology and profit demanded by certain sectors of activity, loss of Faith and meaning, financialization and greed, abandonment of sovereignty of our nations to this Moloch that is the European institution, cowardice, feminization of minds and submission to judges or supranational authorities who decide our future, lack of love, laziness, lack of solidarity with our own people, catastrophic white demographics...The list would be endless, but the concept is very clear: the enemy is the one who opposes in any form the domination of European man over the lands won by his ancestors.

So here is my exhortation, better - my plea - to all of you who are tired, who struggle every day to put bread on the table of your children: fight even harder. Be ready for anything, reach out to your neighbor and share this message with them, come together, form groups of fighters, chains of solidarity, become the shield that will protect, even beyond our civilization, the carnal earth that is the sacred heritage of your children. Appropriately the awareness of your superiority and your genius, have no tolerance towards those who oppose your natural right to be master of your homeland, not if you want our world to continue, not if you want our descendants have the joy of celebrating Christmas in the shadow of the cross.

To all of you, my wishes and thoughts are with you, Merry Christmas, be blessed,

The 23rd December AD 2023
